PART 1: CONTEXT & CRITICAL ANALYSIS

(Based on the Introduction by Eduardo Huaytán Martínez and Andrew Reynolds, and critical studies of Afro-Hispanic literature)

1. AURORA CÁCERES: A PIVOTAL PERUVIAN INTELLECTUAL:

Multifaceted Pioneer:

Zoila Aurora Cáceres Moreno (1872-1958) was a fundamental figure in Peruvian and Hispano-American Modernism, recognized as a feminist activist, journalist, diplomat, and author. Her diverse body of work includes fiction, travelogues, biographies, and essays on women's history and art criticism.

"Montalván, la negra" as Revelation:

This nouvelle, originally published in her 1929 collection La princesa Suma Tica, showcases a lesser-known facet of Cáceres's writing: her deep engagement with Afro-descendant racial politics, diverging from her typical modernist prose towards a more sober realism and naturalism.

2. REINVENTING "NEGRISMO" IN LATIN AMERICAN NARRATIVE:

Breaking Paradigms:

Montalván, la negra emerges within a rich period (the 1920s) where Latin American authors explored "negritud." Unlike many "negrista" novels (written by white authors, often universalizing or exoticizing Black subjects), Cáceres's work presents Afro-descendant characters with power and insurgent attitudes, subverting the "exotic and attractive, but powerless" paradigm.

Intersection of Race and Gender:

The narrative uniquely intertwines racial issues with gender dynamics, establishing a clear genealogy with canonical Afro-Hispanic texts like Sab, but from a distinctly feminine locus of enunciation.

Historical Novel and Voices "from Below":

The nouvelle functions as a historical novel, revisiting Peruvian slavery through a fictional insurgency. It reconstructs history from the margins, from the perspective of the historically excluded and repressed, resonating with a desire to recover the past from "below."

3. MELODRAMA, MAGIC, AND INSURGENCY:

Emotional Economy of Critique:

Cáceres Moreno employs melodramatic and emotional devices (compassion, love, hatred, explicit violence) to condemn colonial slavery and racial injustice. This "affective economy" seeks to mobilize readers' empathy and political stance.

Empowerment through Magic:

The character of Dolores, a "bruja" (witch) with a deep connection to nature, embodies a magical realism element that serves as a political device for social transformation, echoing later works like Carpentier's El reino de este mundo.

Subversion and Ambiguity in the Ending:

While depicting a powerful insurgency and victory for the enslaved, the novel's ending introduces complexity through the revelation of noble lineage and the "whitening" of characters, reflecting societal pressures and perhaps a nuanced critique of racial assimilation.

PART 2: TOPICS FOR CLASS DISCUSSION

Aurora Cáceres's Feminist and Intellectual Identity:

Discuss Cáceres's role as a pioneering intellectual and feminist. How does Montalván, la negra reflect or extend her broader concerns regarding women's rights and social justice?

"Negrismo" and Its Subversion:

Analyze how Montalván, la negra engages with and potentially subverts the "negrista" literary tradition of the early 20th century. How do its Afro-descendant characters defy typical representations?

Melodrama as a Political Device:

Discuss Cáceres's use of melodramatic and emotional strategies (e.g., intense love, hatred, explicit violence) to convey her critique of colonial slavery and mobilize reader sentiment.

The Role of Magic and the Supernatural:

Examine the character of Dolores and the function of magical elements in the nouvelle. How is magic employed as a tool for social change and resistance?

Gender and Race in Colonial Society:

Analyze the intersection of gender and race in the novel, particularly through the alliance between Dolores and Zoraida. How does Cáceres portray violence against women in the colonial context?

The Ambiguous Ending:

Discuss the novel's ending, particularly the revelation of noble lineage and the "whitening" motif. What does this suggest about Cáceres's own views on race, identity, and social transformation, and how does it complicate the novel's insurgent message?
